

Docusearch Investigations Shares 3 Tips to Perform New Resource Directory Search

Docusearch.com is making it easy for anyone to find accurate, verified information. With their new free resource directory that offers nearly 40,000 links to government verified information, anyone in the 50 states can search for public law enforcement data without using a costly middle man.

Docusearch investigations, a premier online investigation service, has added a complimentary information resource database containing close to 40,000 links to various public records by local, state and national government agencies and directories across the nation. Anyone in the 50 states can now search over 30 types including arrest warrants, criminal records, most wanted, property records, and many more. To access the free information database, Docusearch has compiled 3 user-friendly tips to lead people to the information they desire.

“Why pay for something when you can obtain the information for free? Whether a customer is hiring a new employee and wants to check the criminal background, or an ex-spouse has moved without a forwarding address and they need to obtain their new address through a skip trace, our directory of close to 40,000 links can help them locate the information on their own.” said Dan Cohn of Docusearch Investigations.

To perform an information directory search:

- Visit Docusearch’s resource directory at <http://www.docusearch.com/free?refer=press>
- Search by either location or search type
- Narrow results to specific geographic location

The private investigators at Docusearch Investigations are state-licensed professionals, working hard to uncover the information many people are in search of every day. If the information about a subject can’t be found in the complimentary database, Docusearch’s investigators are available to probe further into the records that aren’t available to the public.

To connect with a customer representative to discuss options for a particular situation, they can be reached during normal business hours Monday – Friday at 1-800-474-5350.
