

Changes to the Brokerage Account Search Move Docusearch to the Forefront of Private Investigation

Docusearch, America's premier private investigator has been rolling out changes to their website to increase functionality and user friendliness. These changes are site wide, but the additions to their Brokerage Account Search has made waves across the private investigation community. Docusearch has been featured by Forbes.com as a "Best of the Web" company, which only supports their current popularity with their customers.

The changes include an expansion of Docusearch's database to contain over 135 free resources nationwide. This gives users looking to find Hidden Stocks and Bonds an opportunity to find what they are looking for without investing in a premium search. Other private investigation companies charge for the resources that Docusearch offers pro bono. Some may consider this passing up on an opportunity to make a few extra bucks, but Docusearch views it as reinforcing the foundation of a strong and resourceful company.

In addition to the free database, the investigation company has also added a customer experience rating tool. This allows users to rate their experience with each service on a scale of 1-5, giving other customers the opportunity to collect feedback before deciding on a specific search. Docusearch created this rating tool not only for their customers use; but for the company to evaluate other products on the web and understand the needs of the market based on free versus premium searches. It is this constant attention to the customer experience that keeps them in the front of their field. A Docusearch Professional comments about their expansion:

"At Docusearch, we are always excited about the potential to improve upon our customers experience with our services. The addition of the database allows customers to assess results from our no-pay services before making the decision to purchase a premium search. Our customer evaluation tool gives customers live feedback about the products available, which secures their peace of mind when making final purchasing decisions."

There are many reasons why someone may want to find someone's hidden stocks and bonds, but most involve legal proceedings. Whether you are going through a tricky divorce, or suing someone's estate, learning their Brokerage Account records can be a helpful way to be certain that you know all of the information there is to know.

A Brokerage Account Search allows customers to obtain these records using minimal information like the subject's full name, last known street address, and social security number. This search will identify all known brokerage accounts nationwide, the brokerage name and address, account titles, account types, as well as the approximate account balance.

Conclusively, the updates that have been made to Docusearch's website have moved them to the forefront of innovative private investigation companies. Their unrelenting dedication to customer satisfaction is a recipe for success within itself. Contact the professionals at Docusearch with any questions about the services or products they have to offer.
