BOISE, Idaho, Oct. 12, 2021 /PRNewswire/ -- From time to time it might be necessary for you to do a license plate search to find information on an individual. Now, this can be for a variety of reasons including litigation or pre-litigation, debt recovery or fraud investigations, insurance claims investigations, and many more.

When looking for the right service provider to give you the information you need, you might be tempted to use one of the many services that offer unlimited license plate lookups that give you instant results. To lure you in even further, they typically also offer their services at a low access price or subscription fee.

However, this could be a mistake as these services have some serious limitations. The reason for this is that they simply don't have access to accurate and current information because having this information would be illegal. Yet, despite this, they're effective at marketing their services to the unsuspecting public.

The thing is, the information associated with a specific license plate number is protected by law and there are only a few instances in which this information can be obtained. And these online services simply don't fall under these exceptions.

So, what should you consider when doing a license plate lookup? In this post, we'll look at this question in more detail and show you the benefits of using a Docusearch license plate lookup.

Why Would You Need To Look Up a License Plate?

However, before looking at these aspects in more detail, we'll first consider the circumstances in which you would typically need to do a license plate search. Generally, you'll perform a license plate lookup to find a vehicle owner's information including their name, address, or other details.

The most common reasons where you'll need this information are:

- Accidents and litigation. It often happens that parties to litigation need the information of a driver that was involved in an accident like, for instance, a hit-and-run. Quite simply, this information would then be necessary to track down the owner of the vehicle in order to take legal action or establish what assets they have.
- Used car details. The owner's details can also be helpful when buying a used car. By knowing the owner's details, you can get some insights into a vehicle's history. So, before buying the car, you could learn who owned it, for how long they owned it, whether it was in any accidents, or other relevant information.
- Personal reasons. In some cases, you could want to look up a license plate to find the owner's information for personal reasons. Here, there are a plethora of reasons why you would want this information.
